Summer has always been the hottest season for live music, with rising temperatures bringing the biggest concert tours and festivals of the year. And 2010 is no exception: Whether you're a fan of rock, pop, country, folk, jazz, classical or all of the above, the next few months will provide music lovers with a sonic smorgasbord of choices. From the Women In Jazz Festival at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., to the Newport Folk Festival in Rhode Island, there are numerous destination festivals spanning the Northeast Corridor. Or, you can just wait for package tours such as Lilith Fair and the Vans Warped Tour to make their way to an arena near you. Either way, these concerts are a safe bet to ensure you have a rocking summer ...

Ringo Starr

DAVE MATTHEWS BAND May 28—Sept. 15

Tragedy struck Matthews and Co. in 2008 when saxophonist LeRoi Moore died after an ATV accident. But the band returned with a triumphant tribute in last year's Big Whiskey & The Groogrux King, which earned two Grammy nods and was hailed by Rolling Stone as "their most electric album yet." The top touring band of the decade returns to the road with a two-night stand at Hartford's Comcast Theatre May 28-29, embarking on a three-month road trip that finds them crisscrossing the nation. Davematthewsband.com

RINGO STARR June 24—Aug. 7

With the success of the Beatles Rock Band video game, the recent unveiling of his star on Hollywood's Walk of Fame and the release of his first self-produced solo album, Y Not, Starr is riding high, heading into his 70th birthday July 7. He'll be celebrating at Radio City Music Hall, one of over 20 dates on a tour that will find him playing a mixture of classic hits and new songs with an All-Starr band, featuring Edgar Winter, Rick Derringer and Gary Wright. U2

June 3-Oct. 8

Resuming in June after a seven-month break, the Irish rock legends' 360° Tour returns to North America for 15 dates before heading back to Europe. Bono may turn 50 in May, but the veteran band shows no signs of slowing down, with this Live Nation-produced tour billed as the largest in history. Named the Best Stage Show of 2009 by London's Total Production Awards, the tour boasts immaculate production values as the band runs through an epic set filled with both classic hits and more recent favorites. With dates in Philadelphia, New Jersey and Montreal. u2.com

VANS WARPED TOUR June 25—Aug. 15

Now in its 15th year, this annual gathering of punk rockers and extreme sports fans has outlasted every other festival tour birthed in the '90s. Credit creator Kevin Lyman with adapting to the changing cultural tides and expanding the lineup's diversity. This year's revolving roster features more than 100 bands, including Anti Flag, Dropkick Murphys, ska stalwarts Reel Big Fish, punk-pop crossovers All-American Rejects and Motion City Soundtrack. Vanswarpedtour.com

CAROLE KING & JAMES TAYLOR TROUBADOUR REUNION Through July 20

In November 1970, Carole King (who had written hits for Aretha Franklin and The Monkees) made her debut as a solo artist in a historic show with up-and-coming folkie James Taylor at the Troubadour in L.A. The show launched both of their careers, establishing them among the best and brightest singer-songwriters of the '70s. Now the two Rock & Roll Hall of Fame legends are reuniting with their original band, touring the world with a set filled with 40-year-old favorites from their classic repertoire. caroleking.com

Boston Brass

ROCKPORT CHAMBER MUSIC FESTIVAL June 10-July 18

Now in its 29th year, this Massachusetts music festival has relocated to its new home at the Shalin Liu Performance Center. The five-week festival opens June 10 with an evening of Wagner, Copland and a world premiere commissioned piece by composer Scott Wheeler, and will include performances by Boston Musica Viva (June 18), the Biava String Quartet (June 24-25), a cappella men's choir Cantus (July 8) and the Brentano String Quartet (July 15-16). HE SLEPT WITH JOEY RAMONE An original punk recalls the early days

When it comes to covering rock 'n' roll, few insiders have been around longer than Legs McNeil, who's widely considered to be the first person to use the term "punk" to describe a form of music. After starting Punk magazine in the mid-'70s, McNeil went on to work at Spin before coauthoring 1997's Please Kill Me: The Uncensored Oral History of Punk and last year's I Slept With Joey Ramone.

A born raconteur, McNeil recounts the day he fell in love with music.

"One day my friend John Holmstrom put in The Dictators' 'Go Girl Crazy!'," he recalls. "At that time, everyone was singing about saving the world, but these guys sang 'Cars, girls, surfing, beer/Nothing else matters here.' I couldn't stop playing that album over and over again."

After he and Holmstrom started their magazine in the hope that people would "think we were cool and hang out with us," McNeil became immersed in the New York City rock scene centered on the notorious CBGB.

"John took me to see this band he said sounded like The Dictators, called The Ramones," he says. "There were 30 people there, and one of them was Lou Reed. The Ramones came out and played the wrong song, then stomped offstage, only to come back on and launch into 'Blitzkrieg Bop.' It was amazing. They became big fans of the magazine, and eventually I became good friends with Joey."

Asked about his feelings regarding the tempestuous changes in the music industry over the past decade, McNeil jokingly laments the loss of lavish press parties. But he insists that the music itself is still as strong as ever.

"There are bands like the Ike Reilly Assassination and Sloppy Seconds who have been around forever and keep putting out good records," he says. "What's happened is that there is no more 'music industry.' There are just people putting out CDs, and some of 'em are pretty great. If you want to do it right, you do it yourself. And in that way, I think music has come full circle."

Sometimes it's the history of the space, the acoustics or the performers. Regardless of that je ne sais quoi, music halls are local treasures that attract audiences for a wonderful triumvirate of music appreciation, history and architecture. We took a look at some of the best venues around the Northeast, from New Hampshire to New York to Maryland, and found that each state has some local treasures where people can come together and enjoy one of the best things in life—music.

AN AMERICAN TREASURE

In the revitalized waterfront city of Portsmouth, N.H., the simply named Music Hall is one such gem. Built in 1878, it is the oldest theater in the state and enjoys an "American Treasure" designation by the U.S. Senate. The soaring, domed ceilings and gold leaf murals were recently rediscovered during extensive renovations, which also included recovering the velvet banquettes and adding a fantastic beaux-arts lobby. All manner of local and national programs take stage here, from classic movies and Metropolitan Opera simulcasts to dance and theater.

BOSTON'S GREAT HALLS

Celebrated cellist Yo-Yo Ma has affectionately referred to Boston's Jordan Hall as "one of the most beautiful halls in the world ... It's acoustically perfect for me as a performer and yet it's friendly to the person who's listening, sitting in the audience." There are no bad seats in this acoustically superb and stunningly beautiful venue, which is part of the New England Conservatory. Check out the spring schedule, which could include performances by the Boston Philharmonic, the Handel and Haydn Society, the Cantata Singers or the Boston Gay Men's Chorus.

Around the corner sits Boston Symphony Hall, the grande dame of the city. Built in 1900 for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it became a U.S. National Historic Landmark in 1999. At the time, it was noted that "Symphony Hall remains, acoustically, among the top three concert halls in the world and is considered the finest in the United States." Musical director James Levine has created a
