Travel With Kids: 7 Wonderful Wildlife Experiences Designed for Families

I'm a big believer in the benefits of travel with kids. I took my daughter on her first vacation – a road trip to Florida's St. George Island – two weeks after she was born. As she got older, our annual daddy-daughter trips took us further from home, to the Caribbean, to Central America, and finally to International Expeditions' Galapagos Islands cruise last year.

“Don't be afraid.” If there's just one crucial life lesson I hope to pass down to my daughter, these three words sum it up perfectly. So often in life, fear is the biggest obstacle that prevents us from pursuing our dreams. Traveling adventurously opens our eyes, minds and hearts to nature, wildlife and culture, and also pushes us outside the comfortable bubbles of our daily life.

Travel is notoriously great for education and bringing families closer together. But it also helps kids to become less fearful, more outgoing and gregarious. By encouraging our children to get out of their comfort zones, explore new places and try new things, we help them develop tools that will prepare them for a healthier, happier, more vibrant adulthood.

Here are seven great family tours that IE has to offer for parents and grandparents who travel with kids, all geared towards those who love nature and wildlife...
